

There are several journals devoted to the disciplines of gastroenterology and hepatology. The Euroasian Journal of Hepato-Gastroenterology (EJOHG) started its journey with a novel vision in 2011. After one decade of uninterrupted publication, the time is now ripe to assess what has been achieved and what remains to be accomplished. We have planned to provide a platform to the authors of the Euroasian Region, who was running behind the other elite areas of the world regarding scientific publications. Paradoxically, this region harbors more than half of the world's population with a high prevalence of most gastroenterological and liver diseases. World bodies have designed programs to "Elimination hepatitis by 2030". However, the recommendations formulated in advanced and prosperous countries require considerable modifications to make them applicable in resource-constrained and developing countries of these regions. The voice to attain a "sustainable development goal" (SGD) should be loud and specific from these countries. The journal has published hundreds of articles from these countries to make a scientific issue of these constraints. However, more and more must be accomplished in the following decades. The journal will increase the number of issues per year from next year. A wholly modified and active editorial board will take their responsibilities to accomplish this. The publisher of the journal "JAYPEE BROTHERS" would provide all sorts of assistance to the Editorial Board to reach these targets. Finally, the authors and the readers of the journal would decide if the journal is moving in correct direction. Finally, the authors and the readers of the journal would decide if the journal is moving in the correct direction.

Sheikh Mohammad Fazle Akbar (Japan)

Hasan Özkan (Turkey)

Mamun Al Mahtab
(Bangladesh)